THE PATH TO FREEDOM.

BY O'CINEHAELAIDH.

Youth of Erin, on your shoulders Rests your country's future fame; In your bosoms rest the embers That can blaze to Freedom's flame— Rest the embers that, if nurtured By your strong and steady hand, Rest the embers that, if cultured, Must redeem your motherland.

Not in speeches highfalutin Can the work you need be done, Not in pleading to the Briton Can the vict'ry e'er be won. Not in "moral agitation" For the people's rights to land Robbed of them by despot nation, With the tyrant's ruthless hand.

Not by "Irish Confed'rations," Not by "Clansmen's" secret aid Not by "County Org'nizations" Can your sufferings be allayed ; Not by so called "dynamiters," Not by "Ancient Orders" strong, Not by foolish "Blatherskiters," With their brayings loud and long ;

Not your money, poured like dew drops; Not addresses great and grand, Not your "Leaguers," be they legion, E'er will free your native land; Not your "Five Cent-Spread Light tactics" Not your "Scares" will ever gain One iota of that freedom Which you labor to attain;

Not with sword blade, musket, bay'net, Can the Saxon be assailed— These were tried and tried too often, And as of en have they failed; Not your "bombs of nitrate's" thunder, Not your cannon's mighty roar Will restore the foeman's plunder, Snatched from you in days of yore;

Not in war's fierce din and slaughter, Not in streams of crimson blood, Not in feats of Trojan valor, Not of those will come the good ; Not assassin's keenest dagger, Laying cruel tyrants low ; Not your death on martyr's scaffold E'er will gain your freedom. No !

No! never will such means avail you While, like cravens, soulless, low, You permit that tongue to perish Which your forefathers cherished so, While you let your native music Lie forgotten, lie unsung; While you leave your harp neglected With its every chord unstrung.

While you leave your proud traditions Lie untaught, unread, unknown,

Never can that spirit kindle,

That will make your land your own. While you lisp in foreign accents, While your lips are taught to frame Words and notes of Saxon foemen, You are Irish but in name. Then cease that alien speech for ever ; Long enough its notes have rung In your ears, while naught but falsehoods Have its owners at you flung. Cast their speech and cast their music Back to those from whom it came ; Show at once, and show it plainly, That you are Gaels in more than name ; That the spirit of your fathers, Still undaunted, lives in you; That you're true to their example-As they did so will you do That the tongue which Miledh brought you, That the tongue which Bryan spoke To his men on Clontarf's meadows When he burst the Danish yoke; That the tor gue of saints and sages, Ollamh, Brehon, warrior, king, Which in long departed ages Made your isle with glory ring ; That the music, sweet but mighty, Which their bards were wont to play When they roused men's warlike passions, Live among their sons to-day. Lives as lives the tender seedling, Buried deep the Winter long, Yet in Spring it buds to freshness, And the Summer makes it strong. It blooms, it blossoms, it increases, Day by day it stronger grows And at last, with roots extended, Offshoots many from it throws. So in you remains the seedling Of your language, old and grand; See 'tis nurtured in your bosoms, See it is cultured by your hand. See it buds, it grows, it blossoms; See it flourish day by day, See it strengthen, see it ripen: Yours the fault if it decay. Be it spoken, be it writen, Let its music sweet be known Wheresoever Ireland's children In their exile may be thrown. Then shall all dissensions perish, All your factions low and mean : Then shall blend the flag of orange With your native flag of green. Then, with Ireland thus united-One in language, one in all, One in spirit, each determined To obey his couptry's call-Then unroll your glorious Sunburst, Draw your sword in FREEDOM's name, And no power of earth or beaven Can withstand your righteous claim. -Sunday Democrat.

OBS. —The sentences in the several exercises embrace only such words, for the greater part, as are given in the lists at each heading. Sometimes words in former lists or exercises are again brought into account. The learner should therefore make himself thoroughly familiar with the words, their sounds, and their idiomatic turns of expression to prevent reference to former Lessons

To translate these English sentences into Irish, and to write them in the Celtic character, to speak them from time to time when alone or with others, must at once ensure a knowledge of the language as it is spoken and written. Begin forthwith to speak it.

The learner might find amusement and profit in picking out the words given through the Lessons and arranging them in alphabetical order, in the form of a dictionary. An Irish-English and an English-Irish lexicon could be easily compiled, and would be very valuable as it would contain the words in common use.—Ed ]

The Philo-Celtic Society of New York meets at 263 Bowery every Thursday evening at 8, and every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock p. m., and impart instruction gratuitously to all who desire to cultivate a knowledge of the Irish Language. New York Gaels should urge their neighbors to attend the sessions of the society.

Dear Sir.—I hereby inclose to you a continuation of those little extracts from the Seanchus Mor, or Brehon Laws. I am sorry that I had no time to send you any for the last number, but be sure that you will always hear from me when I can have a minute of time to myself. I hope that those who take any interest in these little expoundings will connect the following with the last given,

Irishmen, never forget this —if you do you shall get left—that the Irish Nation did not bring ONE pound of earth to Ireland—that, therefore, the language is the Nation !

English Translation.

But the cause of the poem having been composed was as follows:- Laeghaire ordered his people to kill a man of Patrick's people; and Laeghaire agreed to give his own award to the person who should kill 'the man', that he might discover whether he would grant torgiveness for it. And Nuada Derg, the son of Niall, brother of Laeghaire, who was in captivity in the hands of Laeghaire, heard this, and he said that if he were released, and got other rewards, he would kill one of Patrick's people. And the command of Lae ghaire's cavalry was given him, and he was released from captivity, and he gave guarantees that he would fulfil his promise; and he took his lance at once, and went towards the clerics, and hurled the lance at them and slew Odhran, Patrick's charioteer.

Or, 'according to others', the cleric (Patrick) was in his chariot at the time, and Odhran was adjusting the chariot, and it was at 'Patrick' himself the shot was aimed. And the cleric was angered, and raised up his hands towards his Lord, and remained in the attitude of prayer with his hands crossed; and there came a great shaking and an earthquake at the place, and darkness came upon the sun, and there was an eclipse; and they say that the gate of hell was then opened, and that Temhair was being overturned; and then it was that Temhair was inclined. And the Lord ordered him to lower his hands to obtain judgment for his servant who had been killed, and 'told him that he would get' his choice of the Brehons in Erin, and he consented to this as his God had ordered him.

The greatest fraud of the present age is the pat ent medicine man and he has so duped the public that he can flood the country with advertisements. The latter, however, are useful now and again, and are all of his nostrums which the public should use. Kansas City, Mo. Sept. 25. 1891.

Editor of the Gaodhal.

Dear Sir :--

I send you the following from the Welsh, if you deem it worth a place in THE GAEL. The original was written for the Eisteddfod by Owen Evans, a Welshman of Utica, N.Y., and translated by Michael Kilroy, a native of Dunmore, county Galway Ireland, at present in this city.

The style of poetry, prose, and chorus are closely followed; but there are a few expressions omitted which seemed to be intended to ridicule the Irishman. Otherwise I think it is a good trans lation. Yours truly,

P. MCENIRY.

One thing is certain—that the Irish is in good hands in Kansas City, and that the piece does credit to the translator in matter and in humor,—Ed]

We have the above poem in cur possession quite a while, but thinking that the Echo was only "sick" we did not wish to publish it.-Ed. G.]

In sending $2. to the Gsel (shout $6. during the last year), Mr. P. A. Dougher, Greenfield, N. T., says.

This is a small sum but I mean to repeat it often. I feel heartily in the cause, but circumstances hinder large contributions. But the day you make THEGAEL a weekly visitor I shall manage to send you $25., or ten years' subscription to The Gael. Any way, I shall try and get you 25 new subscribers this winter.

In a recent letter from my paten's and friends in the old country, they state that the cause of the language has taken such a hold around there that if a man of any respectability is met on the read and not salute him in the mother torgue, he would pass you by with an unsignified notice. - Tha an baire leat, a Ghael! Now every Irish parent in this country that would feel desirous of having his children to learn the language of their forefathers, let him say to his son, "My boy, I would wish you would learn to read Irish, and when you learn a certain amount of it I shall make you a present of a nice watch." And to his girl say. "My girl, when you learn to read the Irish language and sing its melodies to a certain extent, I shall make you a present of a nice organ," a silk dress or any such as the girl would feel anxious to have, and in two years the Celtic glee would ring all over this broad land from Maine to California. Give the youth a chance and they will gain the ground their parents lost.

As we go to press we learn that Rev. Father O' Growney has been appointed to the Irish Chair in Maynooth college—the most effective step yet taken to rehabilitate the language. Our old friend and co-worker, John Fleming, is overjoyed at the good news. May he live long to see and enjoy the fruits of his labor.

With this issue THE GÆL enters on its eleventh year, so that it is now a fixed quantity in the world of latters.

For this hopeful and satisfactory position which THE GÆL occupies to day we might claim a small share of credit. But no; the real credit belongs to those patriotic men and women whose names stand as a memorial of their deeds in the "Sentiments" columns of its pages. It is they who nursed it in its infancy; clothed and supported it in its boyhood, and who now usher it into the world in the full bloom of manhood.

The lines of the poet on another subject might be applied with force to the Irish language, aye, and to the people,

"Oft had it been chased with horns and hounds And Scythian shafts and many winged wounds Aimed at its heart, was often forced to fly,

And doomed to death tho' fated not to die."

Ballynacargy, Westmeath, Sept. 24th 1891.

Editor Gaodhal.

Enclosed find order for one dollar, my subscription to your courageous little paper.

The letter you publish from my friend Mr. O'-Brien in your last issue, page 120, ought to open the eyes of our friends in America. See the good done by one copy of the little Gaodhal: it reminded a man of his duty towards the language of his forefathers, and having manfully done what he saw was his duty, Mr. O'Leary has his conscience clear, he has a man's share in the work of preserving this greatest sign of our nationality.

But, my dear Editor, how proud will you be to know that, thanks to that copy of the Gael, and to his own courage and perseverance, Mr. Patrick C'-Leary is now, beyond doubt, one of the best scholars of Munster. He is a real treasure house of knowledge with regard to the beautiful dialect of the south, and has made, and is yet making, valuable collections of works on Gaelic as spoken in the west of Cork, and especially in his own Beara.

Seeing this striking result of a cause so small in itself, no wonder the Cork Herald in a recent article, pointed out how very easily indeed, the old tongue could be restored in West Cork, and the corresponding disgrace attaching to those who have charge of the education of the country, and who either shut their eyes to their duty towards the national language, or what is worse still, with their eyes open, do their share to make us more and more English every day.

With regard to the translation of "Remember Thee, Yes," on page 114, there must be some mistake*; as you may see by looking back to Gael, p-770.

Respectfully,

E. O'G.

[* Yes, the mistake was ours; we mixed matters up a little—the English translation is what was meant.—Ed.]

[Whisper, you who sought to injure THE GAEL when you could not control it, were not your efforts the disfigurement of the nose to spite the face & If, by your conduct, you circumscribed its circulation to the amount of one copy, should you not atone for it to the Gaelic cause in sackcloth and ashes?]

THE ELECTROTYPES.

The reader has seen our proposition in last issue to supply all Irish American papers willing to contribute to the cost of production, an electrotype cut of the matter contained in the First, Second, and Third Irish books weekly. The following papers have responded to that prop sition.—

The Irish Pennaylvanian, Pittsburg, Pa.

The Critic, New Orleans, La.

The Western Cross, Kansas City, Mo.

The Freeman's Journal, New York City. The Connecticut Catholic, Hartford, Conn. Chicago Catholic Home, Chicago, Ill. The Catholic Sentinel, Chippewa Falls, Wis. The Colorado Catholic, Denver, Colo. New Jersey Catholic Journal, Trenton, N. J. The Catholic Columbian, Columbus, O. The Catholic Sentinel, Portland, Ore. Kansas Catholic, Kansas City, Kan, The Catholic Tribune, St. Joseph, Mo.

The cost of the cuts delivered free by mail to the different papers will be 80 cents, which is less than half of what it would cost them to set up and prepare ordinary English for the same space. The cuts will be six by three-and-one-half inches,—the ordinary size of a school book page; so that it will cost the editors afterwards only the price of paper and press-work to publish the Lessons in book form, shou'd they desire to do so.

If Gaels encourage these journal by increasing their circulation other Irish-American papers will be sure to follow suit This is the most practical move ever made to place Gaelic primary instruction in the hands of every Irish man, woman, and child in the country, and if Gaels do not push it to the fullest extent they may shut up and cease talking of their Irish patriotism.

Hundr ds of thousands of dollars flowed into the Land League treasury because the movement secured an abatement in rent to the farmer. But, as Mr. Blaine said in relation to the tariff, did that hasten Irish autonomy by a single pace? The Language movement, the life of the nation, requires no money, it requires intelligent, patriotic action. If the Irish press at home and abroad take an interest in the preservation of the language it will be preserved ; and it vill not cost them a cent to do so, nor the intelligent Inshman a cent to induce them.

As many of our readers may not know what stereotyping is, we shall briefly explain it .-- When a page of The Gael, say, or any other matter, is set up in type for stereotyping, it is firmly secured in an iron frame. The surface, or face, of the type is then oiled over (to prevent the plaster from ad hering to it) and the stereotyper pours fine plaster of paris, wetted to the consistency of cream, over it. When the plaster settles and dries it is raised off the type, and it is a perfect mold of it. This mold is then placed in a heated oven and when suff ciently hardened it is laid, face downward, on a smooth iron plate and immersed in melted typemetal. The metal runs into the mold and a perfect plate of the page is obtained ; as many plates as may be needed can be taken thereafter, and the work is done in less time than we take to describe it.

The plates thus produced are about the eighth of an inch thick and are screwed to blocks of wood of such thickuess as raise both to the height of ordinary type, and are then called 'cuts' or 'blocks', and are ready for the printer.

The reader will now r-adily see how easy it is to have Gaelic instruction and all other G elic mat ter printed in all the Irish-American papers by this means, the editors needing neither Gaelic type nor a knowledge of the language in the operation.

Stereotyping and electrotyping are similar only that the electro is more durable and a little more costly. L'Epiphauie, Can, Ost. 5th, 1891.

Editor of THE GAEL.

I inclose a Dollar for next year's Gael.

I would wish to express a few thoughts on the Language movement. In my opinion the best way to preserve and revive the language would be to organize a society for to establish primary schools in those parts of Ireland in which the language is spoken, and especially wherever the priest instructs his people in Irish. The society would publish a Primer, a Spelling-book, a Catechism, and a Prayerbook all in Irish, and cheap as possible. Whoever learns his catechism and reads his prayers in Irish may be let learn all the "Bearla" he likes after. I think it of the greatest importance that females should be taught as well as boys, and they would make the best and cheapest teachers for infant schools. Three hundred zealous men of moderate means could do the work, and I would be happy to assist them.

Next, though less important, I think the modern S ought to be substituted for the character now made use of. I often make mistakes and I think other dim-sighted people sometimes find it hard to distinguish between 's' and 'f'. The old (English) books my father brought to this country had the 's' something like 'f,' and think the new way much better. The whole nevertheless respectfully submitted.

ED. LYNCH.

PARNELL DEAD.

Parnell was the most successful Irish leader of modern times, and he attained it by the iron firmness of his will and purpose. Parnell fell, but he was no libertine. And not a few allege his fall to a deep laid conspiracy, the principals of which are the British government, Capt. O'Shea and his wife.

How little we hear from the mugwump press in relation to the seizure of an American fishing craft by Rassia in the R issian portion of the Behring Seaf It is no "Freedom of the press" to permit English papers published in this country to disseminate sedition whenever American rights are in the path of English interests; their editors should be sent to where they belong—behind prison bars. American Tory-mugwumps of to-day are as great enemies to American autonomy as they were when they organized a regiment 1,300 strong in N. Y. City, went to Md. and tell into the Britisu ranks.

Some 205 years' ago John Bull, whose hold on Ireland seemed then very s'im, suid to 'Pa','--

Translation.

THE DRJIDICAL KNIGHT.

In the olden times there lived a gen tleman and he had but an only son. When the youngster grew up the father went in search of a wife for him. In pursuance of this purpose, he came to a farmer's house in which was a fine, beautiful, young girl, and he asked her father to give her in marriage to his son. The farmer said to him that he would not give his daughter in marriage to any one but a mechanic.

The gentleman's son was in love with the young woman, and he said to his father, "I must learn a trade, and the young woman will wait for me."

On the morrow the gentleman and his son went in quest of a man who would teach the son a trade, and they travelled until they came to the edge of the sea, where there was a ship and a man aboard mending her sails. The sailor asked what were they wanting.

"I am looking for a man who would teach my son a trade," said the gentleman.

"It you let him with me," said the Knight (that was the sailor's name), I shall teach him a trade, and I shall give him to you again in a day and a year."

"I am satisfied," said the gentleman

The Knight brought Cormac (that was the gentleman's son's name) board a ship with him, raised his sails and put out to sea. The Knight was a sorcerer; and when he proceeded a short way out to sea, he stuck Cormac with the sorcerer's wand and turned him into a puck goat, and brought him to an island in the sea. The Knight had a beautiful castle on the island, and he had twelve other boys serving their apprenticeship there.

Cormac got along well until the end of the year, and had learned a good deal of sorcery. The Knight brought Cormac with him on the ship to where he got him from his father. The genAjt an d-fuain reed of' acajn.

tleman was on the edge of the sea and he was very glad when he saw his son.

"Here is your son," said the Knight, "he has a good trade, but if you leave him to me another year he will have two trades."

"I shall leave him to you, and welcome," said the father.

The Knight brought Cormac back with him and he taught him sorcery until the end of the second year, and Cormac knew that the knight would not bring him home because the father did not bargain to have him brought back the second time.

When the son did not come home at the end of the second year the father went in search of him. He journeyed until he came to the edge of the sea, and he met the Knight

"Wby did you not bring my son home to me ?" said he.

"It was not in my contract," said the Knight "but you can have him to-morrow morning."

The Knight brought the gentleman to the castle, and next day he brought the father and son with him and left them on the shore. Then, the son said.—

""Great races are to be in Galway to-morrow, I shall turn myself into a horse, and shall win every race. Wager every perny you can get on me. When the races are over the Druidical Knight will come to buy me; you will get two hundred pcunds for me; don't part with my bridle, and I shall be at home before yourself."

The next morning the son turned, himself into a horse, with a golden saddle and bridle. The father rode him and went to the races. He won every race; he sold him, and he got two hundred pounds for him; but he did not part with the bridle, and he was at home before him.

The next day the father and son went to," the farmer's house and asked the daughter.

"Show me that your son has a trade," said the farmer.

They all went out and the son built a fine house which had four wheels under it. They went into it and the house went on the wheels like a big coach.

"I am satisfied that your son has a trade," said the farmer; "he can have my daughter."

Parnell's successful leadership should be a lesson for Irishmen. He was no orator nor the inventor of new ideas (the Brooklyn Philo Celtic Socie ty having raised the LAND and LANGUAGE banner in the Irish World which Davitt and he bore to success), but he had a firm, inflexible will, and kept every Tom, Dick, and Harry who would be-leaders in their places. This is the secret of the Land League's success. Are there not indications that it is the success of the Language movement also?

J O'N. We cannot print your translations because they are too long and of no interest to the general reader. You write good Irish, but twelve pages would not hold it, and our readers would want us to throw it into the waste basket before we would be half through with it. Write short pieces, not over two pages, and you will have full scope. We hope all others will also bear this in mind.

The English landlord in Ireland is decried for exacting rent, but the English manufacturer receives freely what the landlord leaves behind f

The Irish: American Nationalist gives the Irish cause a $1. to fight England; he buys a suit of English broad-cloth and thereby gives John Bull $30, to fight Ireland !

The Catholic ratio to Protestant has reduced 10 per cent. in the last decade ; if the Gaelic revival does not change this state of things in a 100 years Ireland will be as Protestant and as anti-Irish as the Lowlands of Scotland.—Hibernians how do you like the picture f But, "What good is the language"! Ah !

In view of the success of the Gaelic movement an ardent worker in the cause suggests that it is probable that those who supported the Gael and fell in arrears may have met with business reverses, and that it would be patriotic and judicious to wipe off their arrearages and invite them to commence anew. We have never stopt the Gael for non payment and we shall gladly conform to the suggestion of our friend in all cases except in those where we know the debtors to be in a position to pay, namely, those of the learned professions—priests, doctors, and lawyers; and they form two-thirds of the debtors.

Gaels, bear in mind that the Gael will be just as you make it,

The couple were married, and there were plenty of sons and daughters in the house on wheels. They took the ford, and we took the steppingstones; they were drowned and we came safely.

[Norz-A large number of subscribers having, from time time, expressed a desire for Gaelic matter closely translated by which they could the better learn the idiomatic construction of the language, we thought we could not adopt any matter more suitable for the purpose than the old legends common among the people. We follow the original closely regardless of verbial polish—Ed. G.]

Translation-She is far from the Land.

She is far from the land where her young hero sleeps, And lovers are round her sighing;

But coldly she turns from their gaze, and weeps, For her heart in his grave is lying.

She sings the wild songs of her dear native plains, Every note which he lov'd awaking;-

Ah! little they think who delight in her strains, That the heart of the Minstrel is breaking.

He liv'd for his love, for his country he died : They were all that to life had entwin'd him :

Nor soon shall the tears of his country be dried, Nor long will his love stay behind him.

Translation-How Dear to Me the Hour.

How dear to me the hour when twilight dies, And sunbeams melt along the silent sea; For then sweet dreams of other days arise. And memory breathes her every sigh to thee.

And as I watch the line of light that plays Along the smooth wave tow'rd the burning West, I long to tread that path of golden rays, And think 't will lead to some bright isle of rest.

SCOICH GÆLIC.

As some of our readers may not have seen Scotch Gaelic we hereunder give a specimen from Baxter in his Preface to Allen's Admonitions,-Glasgow, 1782-109 years ago.

Tha fios agam, a pheacaich thruaigh, nach gabh t an mianna suim do na nithe so; ach tha fios agam gu d' thug Dia dhuit tuigs' agus reusan, (is tha e tairgse grais dhuit) gu t an-mianna chur fu' chois; is mur bi thu 'n toiseach ad dhuine, cha bi thu gu brath ad naomh. Tha fios agam cuideachd gu bheil an saoghal mu 'n cuairt duit aingidh, is gu bh-il ionus gach ni agus neach a th' ann, ullamh gu d' bhaca' agus gu d' bhuaireadh. Ach tha fios agam nach cuir so airsan tha faicinn le beochreidhe' neamh agus ifrinn air thoiseach air, ni's mo na chuireas fras no osag gaoithe air duine bhiodh a' teicheadh arson anama, Luc. xii. 4. 0 dhuine, smaoinich cia mor an dealacha eidir na bheil agad ri chall is na bheil agad ri bhuidhinn ; eidir na bheir an t aibhisteir dhuit is na bheir Dia dhuit ; is cho'n fheud e bhith nach gabh thu suim an' sin do t anam.

Mr. P. A. Dougher has composed a comic song. "The Pretty Girls of Brooklyn," which reflects great credit on his poetic genius. We shall find room for it in a future issue; also, a Gaelic poem complimentary to O Donovan Rossa
